

Helena Lenasi, MD, PhD is currently assistant professor of physiology at Institute of Physiology, Faculty of Medicine, University of Ljubljana, Slovenia. She obtained her MD title in 1996, and her PhD in 2003 after working as a research fellow at Institute of Cardiovascular Physiology, JWG University in Frankfurt/Main in Germany. In 2015, she was staying for three months at Medical Faculty at University in Osijek, Croatia as a visiting professor. Her working activities include education and research. She teaches physiology for pre- and postgraduate students at Faculty of Medicine and Faculty of Sport at University of Ljubljana, Slovenia. Her fields of interest are cardiovascular and exercise physiology. Her research is mainly focused on studying human microcirculation in health and disease in collaboration with clinics. She is an editor of Slovenian Medical Journal.